Explanation of operating profit

Notable expansion in RTD (Ready-To-Drink) cocktails and the soft drinks portfolio is driving higher revenue, particularly from new acquisitions like Boost Drinks and MOMA Foods.

Gross profit declined during 2020–2021 due to pandemic disruptions and rising costs but recovered in 2022–2023 through operational efficiency, strategic pricing, high-margin product innovations, and acquisitions like Boost Drinks.

Administrative costs fluctuated across 2019–2023 due to restructuring, pandemic impacts, and one-off acquisition expenses, with investments in digital transformation, sustainability, and marketing driving increases in later years.

There has been fluctuations primarily due to strategic investments in marketing and acquisitions (e.g., MOMA Foods and Boost). However, the long-term expectation is improved margins as integration synergies materialize.

Ignore as fairly immaterial to explanation.

The business continues to cope with its loans and has a reasonable interest cover.

Profit for the year increased.

% is down. Due to significant increase in Cost of Sales

This is an example of a strong and strengthening Balance Sheet.

The main reason why the Balance Sheet is strengthening is because the Retained Earnings reserve is This reserve has been created by the profits that the company has made, as reduced by the dividends

Therefore, we can conclude that the Balance Sheet is strengthening because the business is making p and the profit that is retained (after dividends, and some other adjustments) is being used to strengthen
